Dispersion force correction for the calculation of the radial breathing mode frequency of DNA in water and aqueous solutions. The radial breathing mode (RBM) of DNA in water is a proton oscillation of very large amplitude. In this work, we carried out a relativistic molecular dynamics study of the RBM frequency in the DNA phosphate backbone in water and in various aqueous solutions. The frequency and the whole electron density are included in the RBM force field, and the dispersion correction term in the calculation of the long-range electrostatic and exchange-correlation energies is considered. The inclusion of dispersion in the RBM force field leads to the correct trend of the RBM frequency in all solution types. At the Crossroads: Aid to the Balkans (January 4, 1992 - May 13, 1996) Some found the truth behind the Bosnian conflict to lie in the differences between the Balkans' Muslim, Christian and Orthodox populations. All Bosnians are descended from Slavs who settled in the area more than a thousand years ago. Most now speak a language that is the Bosnian variety of the Slavic family. Bosnians took their name from the Bosniaks, an ethnic group of Turkish origin, who dominated the area for more than 500 years before its incorporation into the empire of the Ottoman Turks in the late 19th century. Bosnia was one of the areas over which the Ottomans ruled until the First World War. They were then forced to lose territory to Austria and Serbia. Although the Muslims call Bosnia's capital, Sarajevo, "the city of rivers," the whole country lies under water. The river courses dry up during the summer months. Less than a year after the Balkan wars started, Sarajevo was virtually rebuilt. Repaired buildings, streets and sidewalks, together with a system of traffic lights, put the city on a par with its Western European counterparts. A magnificent square was restored. A popular sea-front promenade, inaugurated in July, became a seaside tribute to the Bosnian people. A new airport was finished in time for the start of the 1992 Olympics. In November, a soccer stadium was built in the centre of the capital. Now an estimated 100,000 fans can watch the local soccer team, FK Sarajevo, play to a packed house. Other cities and towns across the country also did their best to

Field of the Invention The present invention relates to apparatus for sorting mail at a postal distribution center, and more particularly to apparatus for sorting mail into large bins and small bins. 2. Description of the Related Art A major problem which arises at a postal distribution center or in a network of such postal distribution centers is that of efficiently sorting mail so that it may be stored in a manner which will make subsequent handling more convenient. There are several types of sorting apparatus for use in postal distribution centers. One type of sorting apparatus is a large bin sort. With such apparatus, mail items are brought to a series of large bins or conveyors which allow the mail items to be deposited into an appropriate bin by exerting a downward force on the mail items. Because of its high throughput and consequently low labor cost, large bin sorting is very desirable. However, large bin sorting presents some drawbacks which are inherent with the large bins. The large bins are usually five cubic feet in size, requiring a large space and causing considerable breakage to mail items. In addition, the large bins can only receive a limited number of mail items. For example, a large bin may receive only 2,200 mail items in one shift. Consequently, in order to achieve sorting efficiencies greater than about 96%, larger bins are required in order to store an acceptable portion of the mail being received. A further drawback of large bins is that, because they receive a number of mail items (i.e., 2,200), it is difficult to ensure that mail items of substantially identical characteristics are mixed. For example, if a return letter were to be received by a large bin, and a package mailing were to be received by a large bin,
